Dear Mr. Seth,

It is with tremendous appreciation and respect for the work and mission of UNITAR that we address this letter to you. We commend UNITAR for the crucial role it plays in helping empower individuals, governments and organizations with knowledge to overcome global challenges.

We write to you to express our grave concern about the recently announced partnership with Anheuser-Busch InBev, the world’s largest beer producer. This is an incompatible partnership considering the track record of AB InBev as a company[1] and the vast evidence-base on alcohol as a major risk factor in road traffic crashes[2].

With all due respect, we therefore, ask you to immediately end this partnership. Like UNITAR, we are committed to helping solve some of the world’s biggest challenges. Like UNITAR we dedicate our work to help achieve the 2030 Agenda. Like your esteemed organization, we support the creation of innovative partnerships that unlock synergies and untapped potential to reach the Sustainable Development Goals. Such partnerships are vital to address cross-cutting drivers and determinants of ill-health and poverty, to mobilize resources, and to galvanize truly sustainable efforts across different sectors to implement evidence-based solutions for transformational change.

However, not all partnerships serve these ends. In fact, there is a growing body of evidence[3] demonstrating the counter-productive effects of incompatible partnerships[4]. Therefore, we respectfully point out the dangers inherent in partnerships with the alcohol industry[5].

Alcohol and road safety

Partnering with the alcohol industry to promote road safety constitutes a fundamental and grave conflict of interest.

Driving under the influence of alcohol (DUI) is a major risk factor for road traffic injuries – the leading causes of death among 15-29 year olds globally[6]. Impairment by alcohol is an important factor influencing both the risk of a collision and the severity of the injuries that result from crashes[7].

Especially, but not exclusively, in low- and middle-income countries alcohol is a major risk factor for road traffic crashes because of the lack of alcohol control measures and strong drink-driving legislation with a general BAC limit and the absence of enforcement of such policies[8]. As a result:
• 1 in 4 road fatalities in the EU is alcohol related. In 2010 nearly 31,000 Europeans were killed on the roads of which 25% of deaths were related to alcohol[9]
• Studies in low-income countries have shown alcohol to be present in between 33% and 69% of fatally injured drivers[10]
• In South Africa, alcohol was found to contribute to 61% of fatalities among pedestrians[11]

Therefore, cost-effective and evidence-based measures to enhance road safety include alcohol taxation and best buys policy measures, as well as Blood Alcohol Concentration (BAC) limits of 0.05g/ml for the general motoring population and zero BAC limits for more at-risk groups (e.g. novice and commercial drivers), sobriety check-points, enforcement of random breath testing, combined with swiftness of punishment (i.e. administrative license revocation)[12] and supporting public awareness campaigns and alcohol ignition interlocks in vehicles[13]. Evidence shows that these measures are most often strongly opposed by the alcohol industry. Moreover, the majority of the alcohol industry’s actions to reduce driving under the influence and improve road safety – including designated driver programs, ride services and poorly designed media campaigns – lack evidence of effectiveness or haven’t been well-studied[14].

Unethical business practices

Alcohol is no ordinary product and the alcohol industry is no ordinary industry. It is in fact manufacturing disease[15] and has accumulated so much financial and political power that they can block, alter, and derail public policies that promote public health, social justice and sustainable development when they jeopardize their profit margins.

AB InBev, for example, has a long track record of unethical business practices. The Lux Leaks, the Paradise Papers, and an ActionAid report[16] all show that AB InBev actively works to avoid paying appropriate taxation[17].

AB InBev is also tightly connected to the tobacco industry. American tobacco company, Altria, is a major shareholder.[18] Unethical marketing practices are pervasive; exposing children and youth to alcohol marketing and sexualizing and de-humanizing women through marketing is a widespread practice across brands that AB InBev owns.

AB InBev and the alcohol industry in general have also been exposed for attacking and distorting independent science. The tactics the alcohol industry uses to distort science are dilution, distraction, concealment and manipulation[19].
Apparent, multiple conflicts of interest

For its work, UNITAR relies on independent scientific evidence to provide the most comprehensive and compelling high-quality learning experiences and related products and services. However, evidence shows that the alcohol industry works to undermine independent, high-quality science, for instance through suppressing results or attacking scientists[20].

To advance road safety and achieve SDG 3.6, WHO best buy alcohol policy measures, along with other effective drunk-driving measures, need to be comprehensively implemented. However, evidence shows that the alcohol industry, including AB InBev, is opposing and pre-empting such initiatives through their corporate political activities and lobbying.

We are convinced that all these points are good reasons for UNITAR to stay away from partnering with any alcohol industry actor. Given UNITAR’s mission and AB InBev’s troubled relationship with independent science and evidence-based alcohol control measures, we believe there are apparent conflicts of interest at work in this partnership.

Respectful request for reconsideration

We are deeply concerned about this partnership and its implications for global health and the sustainable development agenda. We are concerned about what this partnerships will do to UNITAR’s reputation, credibility and trustworthiness. We therefore respectfully request that you end the partnership with AB InBev and that UNITAR revises its partnership policies based on the lessons learned from this case. We welcome discussion and remain at your disposal.

Yours sincerely,
